

HITLER FEARS ALLIED NUTCRACKERS

HOWEVER seriously Hitler regards the land menace from Russia, he has no option in view of our Mediterranean pressure but also to risk everything in a last resort to keep the nutcracker jaws of the Soviet danger and the Anglo-American threat from closing in on him."

NAZIS WILL GET NO RESPITE IN AFRICA

BY OUR DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

FOR technical and geographical reasons it is possible that the sensational speed of the Allied pincers movement in Africa may now slow down perceptibly, but this does not mean that Hitler will have the advantage of what is only an apparent time lag.

It is not the distance won but the pressure exerted by the 1st and 8th Armies that counts—considering of course, with the Navy and RAF—and I am assured that this will not only be maintained, but increased.

The key to the next phase of the Mediterranean war will be found in the lack of respite given to a broadening sweep of our seaborne and aerial which the Nazi High Command need to regain its balance.

In the past week Hitler's position has deteriorated still further though it would be unwise as yet to say that he is beaten. The Afrika Corps is widening and are showing up more distinctly in a number of sectors along the front.

In Russia—still the most important land from which pins down the bulk of the Axis armies—the winter has taken its toll.

After the loss of millions of his finest troops, the second raters to whom Hitler must now count on are those faring the terrors of the frozen steppes, and only the memory of last year's bitter experience for comparison can tell us whether the results will be similar.

So far as the prospects of the German forces in Russia are concerned, the hurried and impulsive provocation forced on Hitler by our African moves than this double blow to his strength is bound to bring for background. Not a victory confirmed.

It is evident that Nazi propaganda is devoting its home writings to the dangers from the cold rather than the heat.

Already the first big-scale defeat has been inflicted on the Nazis in the Caucasus, and there are seven big mass concentrations of Soviet forces at various points in the theatre of war, most apparently in preparation for an offensive.

I can find no more apt simile, in view of potential developments, than to say that Hitler today is between the devil and no option.

With his do-or-die 1942 grand strategy in shreds, he is desperately trying to save the pieces in Tunisia.

The Nazis are still more concerned about the major European effects of their own blunder than the fate of Africa, and most apparently in preparation for an offensive.

As far as I have been able to hear, he has decided to rely on a "hedgehog" system of defence, and to hold his ground for at least long enough to allow him to blunt the edge of the counteroffensive.

But to do this he must drain men and plane-power in order to keep the nutcracker jaws of the Allies from closing in on him.

The mobility of the Luftwaffe is well known, and many of the long-drawn front squadrons, especially troop carriers, were posted to the desert.

TURNING OF THE TIDE

"DON'T be too optimistic," I said to myself. "The workers may slacken off unless we put a gloomy face on things." I had a gloomy face, and the terrible truth in the days when every nation but the United States was at war was that annihilation. Then they did not think.

Today they should be allowed to exist in the knowledge that the last month in history was in grave peril.

Now is the time for them to show that they are not the dandies of the dinobirds of genius of which we are so fond.

I know that there are grim situations ahead. In the spring, our casualties will be very heavy. But the tide of the war of the Continent will end to our advantage.

And we can also look forward with justifiable hope to a victory over the Japanese. Already it is proved that the Japanese Fleet is beaten.

As the Rommel myth exploded, already we know that the British Army is not beaten.

Already it is proved that the Japanese are beaten.

Already it is proved that the Germans are beaten.

But I am also sure that the Nazis will be beaten.

They face, and perhaps before death, the same grim reality as the rest of us.

Woman Who Didn't Tell!

WIVES (In Court)

I HAVE always been told by my husband that he had never told anyone that my husband goes to bed with his boots on.

My answer to the question of "What do you think gives me this?" is that he wears his boots on his ears and puts them in his hands to me on Saturday and subs it back in the week.

When I found another woman's hair on my husband's shoulder, he excused it by saying that he had been drinking.

The TWISTED MIND OF THE BLONDE BEAST

THIS Germans who love great running slogan, like "Die Toten haben keine Söhne," have among their vast stock of emotional gospels, such as "Durch die Nacht und Blut zu Licht," which sounds very fine indeed.

But only the night of those are real, the night of Germany as a solo-w-w-w-w. It dances sickly and shrewdly over a marsh that grows darker as it goes on.

Those who follow it must end in the mud.

Now, they go on mounting "Durch Nacht und Blut zu Licht," together with their "Sieg Heil" and "Gott mit uns." And their other empty war cries. The rollers and levers of democracy are at rest.

I remember how, when I was a child, I found a log lying in a wood, and I took it home. From end to end and looked at once solid and velvety.

My friends and I, living in many countries which I have for gotten began to raise the log, and rather turn it over, using thick sticks.

The log rolled a little. We were soon shown that it contained a colony of horrible pale insects, and that wood was rotten and dangerous.

We withdrew, and the log remained, old and white, and heavy, triumphant, thin, and went on looking green mossy charrmung and wet.

The Nazi system is like that log. It is on the move; we see the flailing dead of nations. Once more, tremendous effort will send it rolling over and expose its poisonous rotteness until the clean winds and rain of the world break it up and wash it back into the earth.

But one pause, one recoil, and the crawling mass will drop creatures that live in the darkness and decay beneath it.

What filth they hide!

I have the opportunity to reconstruct the history of Germany from some letters of a Nazi official who was with the Germans in occupation.

He was full of Nazi slogans and catchwords of the most high-sounding sort.

Perverted Ideas

I have stuck extracts from his correspondence together, to make a species of diary.

What a diary of night and blood and death, of savagery and innocent blood—this son of darkness has made!

The most hideous thing about it is that the man feels he is in the right.

As witness this document:

"Read this. Don't in view of the same belief in the roughness of the stabbing that animates a clerk who pushes a paper-clip across a throat as a dress-mender cuts a pattern...."

The author of the letters from which this Diary is drawn, is a Nazi official who, in Greece to this day, with many others.

Read this. Don't in view of the same belief in the roughness of the stabbing that animates a clerk who pushes a paper-clip across a throat as a dress-mender cuts a pattern...."

It is the most hideous thing about it is that the man feels he is in the right.

As witness this document:

"I have been

MAY 11 It is even easier

when some men might find amusing. Today, I am a man, I do not find it amusing in itself. It is my job to work in the interests of the Reich.

It must always be kept in mind that people are not the Asiates and the Greeks are not human beings in the sense that we are.

They have human characteristics, but are of a lower order.

The Greek is, to the German, what the Chinese is to an average European... My present task is to collect young female Greeks for deportation.

Bodies And Souls

It is perfectly reasonable that the German army, the best armies of our far-flung European lines need to be amused like any other.

And the general principle of reshuffling women from their various homes is a good and sensible one. In the first place most young women are either in love or have some body in love with them.

To concern them for this kind of trouble is to cause unnecessary trouble among the population.

Therefore, it is likely to cause unnecessary trouble among the population. So, the Asiates and the Greeks are not human beings in the sense that we are.

They have human characteristics, but are of a lower order.

The trouble with women is that they fall away to the German boys if they don't eat out once a day.

There is a certain show of reason in this remark. Greeks have little enough to eat.

If we want food and they have it, it is perfectly obvious that they should be fed.

An old woman screamed at me today: "Look at my arms!"

She meant to say that the Germans had eaten the food on which she had been working for herself.

But why not? Assume that you want sugar. Will you not be able to give it to a stray dog?

Nor should we deprive ourselves of the pleasure of eating.

I have collected 20 women to date, of ages ranging from fifteen to nineteen years.

Wherever you go in Europe you will find Greek girls.

They can adjust themselves to any situation, no strings, no interior peoples.

Indeed, so does the Fuehrer call. As it seems, about thousand men, women and children of all ages have gone.

Indeed, so does the Fuehrer call. As it seems, about thousand men, women and children of all ages have gone.

The Greeks are a disgusting only goes to show the kind of creature we have to deal with. I learned the fact, however, in a similar way.

It seems that the boy had a sister, aged seventeen, who had been married to work in the kitchen for our officers.

She contrived to get enough to eat for herself by bringing scraps of food to her brother.

But, as you know, the Dorian was not the worst punishment she could have) thrown out.

She came to me today and said she had been beaten and had him down at my feet and said:

"See! See! I'm dead! I'm dead!" She was too dead to speak. I took her to the food, look and remember it! I locked her with the set. She is fat from ill-looking, and will die for export."

June 15 of the girls whose name we want to know. She went into some rigmarole about being engaged to marry someone else, and that kind of thing.

And she came with a statement which is funny enough to hear repeating. She said:

"Do not send us any more letters in the world rather than be sent away!"

She could not help laughing when Kohler saw her. How generous of her! She will do anything! How Kohler said then: "I will clean your boot, wait on you like a slave, be your servant, only don't send me any more letters."

I replied: "You will clean boots, serve like a slave, and do whatever you are told to do, whether you are sent away from your Ryan or not. Get out of the way."

She clung to my boots. I had to shake her off again. An irrepressible Kohler put it: "Like a cat that has trodden on a fly paper."

A White Cargo

But later on her Evan came begging for her release, stuttering a mass of rubbish about devotion, life, love, as deep as Kohler had one of the men give this a good hard kick.

By then the Greeks began to complain: they are weak and their bones break like clay pipe-stems.

THESE SHIPS

This is the saga of a ship. To the men who sailed her she was far more than a mass of machinery and steel. She was something vital: something alive: she was a being; a ship with a soul.

But ships, too, grow old. The years and their service wear them. Yet ships, like the men who sail in them, have something of that unquenchable spirit that is born of the limitless ocean wastes. This is the saga of such a ship.

It Is Men Like This Who Sail the Little Ships.

SHED been 72 hours out of port before the best of her crew had come aboard. Sixty hours previously the Old Man had set her course, the helmsman answering: "Nor'east it is. We'll be in the harbor by noon, or thereabouts!" She answered to her helm easily and smoothly, for it meant—England! But there was a new note to the bell, a new, solid heat, as though excitement had put an iron strain on it.

For nearly 25 years these engine-room hands, the THUMPERS—THUMP—THUMP—THUMP, as they walked around driving that black, snake-like ship, had been as fresh as if they were motionless, in its bath of heavy oil.

For 25 years she'd somehow managed to make her way from port to port, through the world's wider, wilder, weird design to pick up, and earning the most surprising dividends for the shareholders of the company that owned her.

During all that time she had sailed through one world war, into a difficult period of peace, and into this second world war battle.

She'd defied nearly everything, sailing from Hong Kong, sailing on to one occasion when an enemy torpedo sank her grievously, and then sailing home port one-third full of salt water.

The Seven Seas got to know that, that was the kind of thing the Old Man and her crew took most or less for granted. In the coniferous Western Ocean gait. After she'd been wounded they hung about, and then salved her to those out-of-the-way ports of regular freight, and the sound of Sunderland.

The Seven Seas got to know the sound of her ancient, wheezing engines, with their THUMP—THUMP—THUMP—THUMP, and if Davy Jones got tired of stretching his arms in the hold, it was not because she evaded him with any slick turn of speed, but because he was old. Didn't he himself, it seemed, take a look at this would-be prize and say, "I'm not fit for her, I'm not fit for her"? And then, like a youngster would, examine a tiddler—and clutch it tight, and then drop it.

But she was, after all, a ship.

She has a being, a heart, she drinks in great gulps of ocean, and her crew breathe everywhere she goes.

And again down in that great rounded belly of hers there beats that old heart—THUMP—THUMP—THUMP.

But 72 hours out of port, on the return, the rhythmic thumping of the THUMPERS was silent.

This was a peculiar jarring screee-eet that tore into the thunder.

It had been caused through too much coal in her great maws, or too much oil, or too much salt, or too much over-indulgence in anything. It was just that she had been given a warning. It was just that she had become suddenly tired. Very tired.

THE CALL OF OLD M RIVER

Perhaps she wanted to reach home, and was longing to be home again. She didn't want to be so many miles from miles away from old familiar places—it her heart, her soul, her bones, to do something that near that great man-made cradle where she was born.

She wanted to die to the sound of the waves, the roar of the wide rivers, on banks thousands of Britons that day, and the day before, and the day after, the Seven Seas.

She wanted to pass, and sail into that Port from which no ships, no sailors, ever return, she wanted to be buried in that Port, not out here in a vast arena of sand, mud, and water, where she had been laid to rest, and then forgotten.

Like the old freighter, her Old Man, she had been a part of the crowd. Most of 'em were born, died, fought, toiled, and were laid to rest on the banks of that well-known river.

You'd have thought they were a mighty crew, but they were wrong. When it came to fishing her out of reach of the sun, the stars, the moon, through some particularly dangerous areas dotted with enemy mines, they were as good as any other gun at any point, as any swift-moving boat, as any other gun, as any other brother, only stuck together like brothers—only more so.

They'd never admit it, every man jack would go through the same routine, and then others.

And so, for that matter, would the old ship—for them. For she was a ship, and she had the "crowd."

Up to the tip-top need, with Shorty number 1, the recently relieved watch that had come up on deck, were below, were waiting for him.

More guns! More munitions! Still the ships needed for the allied attack. Were never ships more important. Most among them are the Household Milk ships. They have millions of tons of shipping to the front. Dried foods such as Household Milk and Dried Egg have millions of tons of shipping. U-BOAT MEN IN JAIL SHIP

Stockholm, Saturday. THE Norwegian training ship Soerlandet, flying off Jacobsnes, is being used as a prison for recalcitrant members of the crew.

Some 2,000 soldiers, mostly Austrians, who have been serving on the Finns, from or in Finland, have been sent to special concentration camps in North Norway.

Between 1,300 and 1,500 of them are at a camp near Kirkenes. They sometimes arrive handcuffed and with their stripes or distinctions torn off.

The local population are forbidden to approach them. What would you do with German guards? These men are criminals and deserters, prisoners, the Germans are employed on road building. They are treated as traitors, as are the Norwegians—Reuter.

"ITALIANS ARE NOT FRIGHTENED"

PAVOLINI, Italian Minister of Education, in a Rome broadcast last night (quoted by Reuters) said:

"Within the next few weeks the final battle in North Africa will be won and we must wait calmly for the outcome."

"The bombardment of Tunis and Tripoli is an advantage to us," he said.

"It's really small potatoes for deep or shallow thinkers in America," he said. "England's blunder in which country is coming to an end in the war," added Reuter.

Air Ministry Explains

SACKING OF THE OVER 50's

MUCH of the criticism arising from the statement that men over 50 in the Royal Observer Corps are to be replaced by younger women due to a misunderstanding, it was stated at the Air Ministry yesterday.

The proposal relates solely to the replacement of a proportion of the members employed in the Operations Room. The purpose is to strengthen the staff of officers in operations rooms not employed in operations rooms are not affected.

The proposal has been interpreted as a plan to replace all men over 50 in the Royal Observer Corps by women.

Secretary per cent of the Observers are still employed out of doors at observer posts. These are the 'spotters' who are not affected by the proposal.

Of the men in the operations room, about 1,400 are aged 50 years or more.

Some are over 70. Of the total, 1,200 are part-time and 200 full time.

70 HOURS A WEEK

There has been a tendency recently for the age of the central staff to rise.

Many of the younger men who were serving in the corps during the Battle of Britain have been called up.

At present, the hours worked by the remaining members in their own occupations have increased.

Some of them are putting in as much as 12 hours a week, many less, depending on their work.

Under conditions of enemy attack the work at the centre imposes a strain which young people stand better.

Convoys To Russia Cost 9 Warships, Says First Lord

BRITAIN'S task of delivering supplies to Russia is harder than mounting the vast operation in North Africa," Mr. A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, declared in London yesterday.

"Every supply to Russia must be made by sea, whether by U-boat and air attack."

The Navy's losses in these operations are three destroyers, three minesweepers and one submarine," he said.

Declaring that the two main battles to be fought the hardest which the enemy is least likely to resist, he said to seek our Russian allies, Mr. Alexander was speaking at the Friends' Meeting House, Euston, W.N. 1.

"The enemy is still powerful, still concentrated, but a ring is being drawn around him and a limit set to his conquests."

He had hit the enemy hard in the Mediterranean, and our successes in that theatre would set a pattern for the Atlantic," he said.
